

Alyssa Renaud, M.A.

High School Technology

Alyssa Renaud graduated from Boston College with a bachelor's degree in communications and film and earned a master's degree in journalism from Emerson College.

Ms. Renaud is passionate about media and technology education. She was a graduate assistant for Emerson College's high school summer journalism program. She mentored high school students in video production from all over the Boston area while an intern for The Transformative Culture Project.

Ms. Renaud is a news reporter and filmmaker. She has produced digital content for the USA TODAY Network, an Air Force Base newspaper, a women's online magazine, and a tech news site. She directed and produced her own short films and worked on other film projects as a video editor and production assistant.

In her free time, Ms. Renaud can be found writing, reading, watching films, or cooking. She is an avid traveler, having visited most of the United States and several European countries. Her hometown is Oklahoma City, though she grew up in a military family that lived in many places.
